An internet download manager can resume interrupted downloads, a .Navy divers have found the bodies of two missing sailors from the USS John McCain — a U.S. warship that was intentionally rammed by a Chinese vessel last week — in the southern Indian Ocean. The divers Friday located the remains of one sailor, Petty Officer 2nd Class Dayton Hicks, in the frigid water near an object they believe is a “ping” locator beacon from the missing USS Fitzgerald. The Navy said a second body was located on “a possible unknown object,” but it is still being investigated. “We owe it to the families to find them,” Adm. William F. Hagen, the CNO, said Friday at a Pentagon press conference. The divers were seen at the stern of the McCain, which was carrying 58 crew members, and one of them, Petty Officer 1st Class Clifton Newman, called his wife and mother before returning to the ship about an hour later, an official said. The gruesome discovery of the bodies of two men, Hicks and McCain crew member Sean Christopher Smith, is the first tangible clues of the more than two days of intense search for the two ships that collided east of the Japanese island of Oahu on July 21. As authorities revealed the gruesome discovery Friday, relatives of the missing sailors looked on at a news conference in San Diego and protested at the Pentagon. "We are done searching. We are done hoping. We are done
