Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to methods and systems for increasing oil production using fracturing techniques to stimulate subterranean oil-bearing reservoirs. More particularly, the invention relates to methods and systems for monitoring and controlling fracturing operations.

2. Background of the Invention Oil and gas exploration and production is a very capital-intensive business. The overall goal of the industry is to achieve high rates of recovery of hydrocarbons from the subterranean formations using the least amount of drilling and fracturing fluid and causing the least amount of damage to the formation. In order to accomplish this, the wellbore must be drilled to the required depths, completion and production equipment installed, and the perforations must be accurately placed using the appropriate number and size of perforations at the correct depth in the wellbore. In typical subterranean formations, wellbores are drilled to a target zone of the formation and then one or more production zones are open-hole completed (i.e., without a casing or casing packer) using perforation guns. In the typical method of perforating, steel perforating guns or “guns” are lowered into the wellbore on a wireline, tubing, slick line, coil tubing or drill pipe and suspended from the wellhead equipment using sheaves.
