Stem cells play a key role in tissue engineering and regeneration; therefore, a variety of different stem cell types have been investigated. However, dental pulp derived stem cells (DPSCs) are different in respect to morphology, marker expression and differentiation ability. These DPSCs have relatively simple morphology compared to bone marrow mesenchymal stem cells (BMSCs). DPSCs have been shown to differentiate into bone and cartilage, but their self-renewal potential in respect to cell proliferation and tissue differentiation is unknown. Here, we show that the DPSCs maintained their pluripotency and proliferated more rapidly than BMSCs. The DPSCs also displayed different marker expression, and a high cloning ability in comparison to bone marrow MSCs. Also, the DPSCs have advantages such as a simpler differentiation mechanism in comparison to BMSCs. As DPSCs have been shown to be able to respond to various signaling pathways, they can be important sources for both embryonic stem cells and induced pluripotent stem cells (iPSCs) in the future.1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method of forming a semiconductor device. More particularly, the present invention relates to a method of forming a gate dielectric layer and a buried bit line, which are applicable to a high-density memory device. 2. Description of the Related Art A DRAM is a kind of random access memory, and DRAM memory cells are categorized into a plurality of cell types. Types of DRAM cell include a stacked capacitor cell (STC), a trench capacitor cell (TTC), an embedded dynamic random access memory (eDRAM), a capacitor over bit line (COB) cell, a capacitor under bit line (CUB) cell, a lateral capacitor cell (LTC), and a floating gate transistor cell (FGT). Each cell type has its own advantages and disadvantages. For example, the STC and TTC cell structures employ specific materials and require a number of complicated manufacturing processes. In contrast, the eDRAM and LTC cell structures employ simple materials and processes, but require a large area, especially when the
