you can enter the serial number of your upgraded cdkey (serial 2). for example, if your original cdkey was 2, your upgraded cdkey should be 4. note that this does not affect your back later to make sure the test is ok. q: coroutines in nativescript/angular2 i'm trying to get a handle on the concept of using coroutines as i want to run some async code while keeping my app responsive while that code is running. the async code is a call to the appauth service, and i'm trying to understand how the model fits in here. my research has led me to this video, which presents ideas around this very area. in the video, vlison gives a very clear presentation of how coroutines would fit into a nativescript/angular2 app. i've read some blogs and examples online which purport to show how coroutines are used with nativescript/angular2. my understanding of nativescript is that it only runs on ios, and that it is an extension of the ios framework. it seems to me that the only difference between the web apps and nativescript is that there is no xaml/html view that defines the screens in a nativescript app. my understanding of angular 2 is that it is a javascript framework. what i also don't understand is how an angular app handles native plugins like appauth. is that information stored in any part of the angular app? so given that i have questions about these concepts, here is how i would like to go about implementing a solution that would give me a good understanding of what is going on and what changes i would need to make to my application to support coroutines. create a new nativescript/angular2 project using either the starter or sample project templates. i'd like to know if the view in the sample app is what would eventually be coming from the angular engine. in the sample app, open the app.module.ts file, which has the following code:

import { nativescriptmodule } from 'nativescript-angular/nativescript.module'; import { appcomponent } from './app.component'; import { approutingmodule } from './app-routing.module'; @ngmodule({ declarations: [ appcomponent ], imports: [ nativescriptmodule, approutingmodule ], entrycomponents: [ appcomponent ], providers: [] }) export class appmodule { }

i've created an app.component.ts file which has a button that calls the login method from the app.ts file. i've written some code to handle logging in, and i want to get a handle on how the application code fits in with how coroutines work in nativescript. 5ec8ef588b
